Chapter 1 by Laura Branum

Running. It's hard to breathe. "Can't let it get me. Can't let it get me." She panted. Thorns scraping and cutting her.

Chapter 2 by intellikat

She had been diagnosed with cancer.

Chapter 3 by 20hupj

The thorns where just an on going reminder of what was inside her.

The pain was there constantly, scraping at her inside, as if something alive was in her and it wanted out, out, OUT!

She felt like she was running endlessly, the finish line never in sight. She had seen many other competitors give up and let the cancer just take over. But she knew deep inside that she had to keep running, even if her lungs burst.

She had to keep going.

Not for a year.

Not for a month.

Chapter 4 by Eloise

She had to take a shortcut. Not the path that wound far around the thornbush. So she pushed through the thorns and ran, ignoring the continuous scraping against her. Her lungs filled with little air and she panted in order to continue breathing.

She had been running for hours now.

But it felt like a lifetime.

Chapter 5 by Jecka Adriano

Someone called her name. "Annie... Annie..." Thorns scraping and cutting subsides as she opened her eyes from the hell she is suffering. The voice clearly gives her light, hope and warmth to her decaying body. She never felt that way before, as she fully opened her eyes as the sun caressed her swollen eyes, face of a young man is registering through the light.

She cant breath.....

She cant utter any sound....

She cant even move her eyes to see whats happening...

All she can remember is that a young man beside her called her Annie....

Chapter 6 by Michael Gordon

Her eyes opened. An intense wash of blinding light fills her shivering body.

A hospital.

She took a moment and tried to calm herself down, her hands were quivering and her heart racing faster than she had ever felt before.

She closed her eyes again and began to calm down.

"I'm safe now," she thought. In fact it was more than mere thought, it was a feeling, as if there was no past and no future. Nothing could hurt her, nothing could upset her, nothing could scare her.

A nurse walked into the room and said,

"How are you feeling?"

"I'm okay," she said.

"You look better today, that was a long nap you had there, I almost thought you weren't going to wake up."

"How long was I asleep?" She faintly mumbled.

"4 days."

The door opened and the doctor walked in. She looked at his name tag, "Rhys Annik" it read.

He sat down on her bed and began looking at his laptop. He didn't say anything. For close to 30 minutes he typed. The computer was facing a direction that made it very difficult to make out what he was doing.

At last, he closed the laptop. Still no words. She looked over to Ann, she looked worried and a little antsy.

"Are you su-"

"SHUT UP! SHUT THE FUCK UP!" Shouted the doctor.

Ann looked at her with sympathy and left the room.

The doctor stood up and locked the door behind her. He approached the bed and looked her right in the eye.

In a calm, soothing voice, he spoke.

"If you fuck up my story, you will die."

Chapter 7 by Paper Beard

The doctor put his hand in his pocket. See more of Story Wars looked to be a small silver pen.

The blade flashed a reflection.

A scalpel.

"Small but deadly in the hands of a trained surgeon. I only have to make two precise cuts and you would be paralysed from the neck down",

Chapter 8 by Kalil Warren

Then out of no where, Spider man busts through the window and rushes the doctor.

"What the hell!" yells the doctor at the top of his lungs.

Spider man punches the doctor in the side of the face, knocking him.

"Wow, Thanks Spider man." I said.

"You get one!" He replied.

Jumping out of the window.

In the corner of my room, I see it now. For the first time. The long black figure that been stalking me. It's all over now.
